

Men, Women and the Highly Technological Society

By Rick Rossi

When two men can marry, I figure all bets are off. I can live anyway I want. The world has been turned upside down. I can challenge any cultural assumption I want. But then, we know cultural rules have their roots deep in prehistory and genetics. Neither men or women have changed fundamentally over the last one hundred thousand years. We have adapted, that's all. Generally speaking, men are interested in sex, youth and beauty and women in resources and safety. Men are mindlessly sexual and women are opportunistic and clever. Do I blame women for being so? Men? Well, we men are hardwired, that's all I can say. Women? We know that in a primitive society for them to speak even one word depended on men allowing them to do so. That it has been such is unassailable. A woman had to be clever and devious just to survive. But that was in a primitive society. A highly technological society, that allows women to garner her own resources without permission from men, creates a completely new set of circumstances with which men have to understand and cope.

Let me preface any further statements with the ethical underpinning that we as human beings cannot prevent one half of our population, women, from becoming all that they can be. It would be wrong. However, we as men now have to figure out what we are going to do. I would suggest that accepting and embracing the genetic nature of our sexuality is the first step. We are what we are, you know it and I know it. Does that makes us immoral human beings? Not at all. But, if you listen to modern cultural precepts, based by the way, largely on Christianity and monogamy, then we are basically without any moral compass. It is becoming more obvious however that the "game" has been stacked against us for years. We have been told we are no good unless we are mindless resource generators for women. We have been involved in a game of resource swapping that is stacked against our very genetic being. And of course we are going to stray, it is our nature. We want to sometimes. We are supposed to sometimes. Indeed, before Christianity, it was understood as such. And now remember that men marrying men changes everything. The way you now choose to live is wide open. Think about it. What kind of a deal is it that states a man must be intimate with only one woman, must supply her with all sorts of trinkets and then, if a man strays, he loses half his resources? Talk about a losing deal from the onset. No wonder some men turn into sappy, dependent, despairing creatures. The ironic part is that after awhile the woman loses interest and respect for a man because he has turned exactly into that fawning, lackluster male that the cultural precepts force you to become. For the most part, it is because a woman's genetic predisposition is to always be looking for the alpha, especially during her fertile stage of life. But overall, how foolish on our part to be trapped in such a way? Do you really like being being a slave of your sexuality, regardless of that phantom called love?

So what do we do when we now have a situation where women control half the money and all the sexuality we are designed to crave? First, men need to understand that they will be traded like expendable pawns. A woman who has her own resources and controls complete access to her body can pick and choose from any number of weak mangina's who are willing to give up their masculinity because they have no control of their own sexuality and, by the way, no game. So first, understand the situation today and gain control of your own impulses. It is relatively easy, once you understand the playing field, how you are being manipulated and the new rules of the game. I certainly do not expect our testosterone fueled youth to be able to control themselves and they will have to suffer the lumps as we have, but by thirty you should have yourself under control.

Secondly, establish, and most importantly, maintain your male network. Then establish a female network. These people should be your friends, there for you when you are swapped.

You do not want to be alone. Being alone after you are traded leads to very strange feelings and you will need a sounding board and a group of people that will support you and at times set you straight. Women are very good at maintaining their networks for precisely these situations. In other words, never rely on one woman, make friends with both males and females with the understanding that you may one day very well be traded, especially if you do not do as told. Remember, there is a line for your place. Make sure you establish and maintain a line of females that like you and are available to you to pick and choose if you are traded, as most likely you will be. Women do not have to work at such for men, it is ready made for them.

Now I am not talking about becoming some profligate male that uses women for his own sexual gratification. Women do have feelings and hurting someone emotionally is tantamount to hurting them physically and doing either is unethical. It's the same as a woman using a man for his money. It is distasteful, weak and disingenuous. Making female friends will give you access to sex and friendship when needed. You must always remember, however, that sex for most women is a tool but for men, well, it is just sex, something I doubt most women will ever understand.

Lastly, if you find a woman you wish to spend a long time with, good for you, but these days there are many, many men out there, and women, who have spent many years with a person only to be unceremoniously cut loose. You need to be prepared. Understanding how the landscape has changed in this highly technological society and your options as a man now that the cultural upheaval is upon us is the first step. Oh, and understand, that some women who have a call on or want to have a call on your resources will fight you at every turn in your path to freedom.